Which of these are most likely to become our reality?

1. Companies will encourage their employees to work from home indefinitely. As a result, our homes will become hybrids of living and working space.
2. Having spent a considerable amount of time at home, more and more people will get fed up with their confined urban flats and will move to the country in search of more space.
3. Anti-vaxxers' claims will be debunked and the vast majority of the global population will get vaccinated against Covid-19.
4. The idea of a staycation will really kick off with more people wanting to travel locally and discovering the gems of their nearby surroundings.
5. Foodtrucks and services like Uber Eats will gain more popularity than standard restaurants.
6. University courses will be taught entirely remotely and there will be no longer need for university campuses.
7. Video-on demand services like Netflix will take over traditional TV. People will stop watching films on TV entirely and TV will become a mere news provider.
8. Online doctor appointments will become the norm.
9. More people will turn to renting rather than buying, so the sale of flats and vehicles will drop.
10. Libraries will disappear as more and more people will be reading e-books and listening to audio-books.
11. 5G health risks will be debunked and this type of global network will become the most widespread in the world.
